Robert Lee Wayne posted:

He was a loving father, not so much with words, but with the things he would do for you. dad would work on cars for people who couldn't afford much. He would stop and change a flat for someone he didn't even know. He always like fresh baked goods on Sunday, but not so much in retirement. We had a garden and he loved to work it and grow food. We heated with wood and gas, and together we cut and stack about 4 cords of wood a year. He was a man's man, liked auto racing, football, baseball, gardening, horticulture, building things of wood. He was a fixer, bother of machines, and life, he let you draw your own conclusions and taught what he knew. He was a good father and grandfather and would give you the shirt off his back, a man's man, love you dad. Your son Robert Lee Wayne
